WINS TWO GAMES.

Star Junction Takes Both Morning and Afternoon Contests.

Star Junction won two baseball games played with the Connellsville Independents at that place Monday, taking them both by the same score, 3 to 1. Although 10 hits were secured by the Connellsville Independents they scored but two runs and Star Junction, with but five hits, net six runs.

In the morning the Star Junction lead all the time and in the afternoon it looked like a rout, the Connellsville Independents not getting a score until their half of the last inning. This makes 12 straight games that Star Junction has taken. The only big hit of the games was a two-bagger made by C. Carson.

They helped me as nothing else has done." For sale by all dealers—Adv.

AN EASY WAY TO INCREASE WEIGHT

Good Advice for Thin Folks.

The trouble with most thin folks who wish to gain weight is that they insist on drinking their stomachs or stuffing it with greasy foods, rubbing on useless "flesh creams," or following the foolish physical culture stunt while the real cause of thinness goes untouched. You cannot get fat until your digestive tract assimilates the food you eat.

Thanks to a remarkable new scientific discovery, it is now possible to combine into capsule form the very elements needed by the digestive organs to help them convert food into rich, fat-laden blood. This marvelous stroke of modern chemistry is called Sargol and has been termed the greatest of flesh-builders. Sargol aims directly at the cause of thinness, the stomach and its ability to literally soak up the fattening elements of your food and pass them into the blood, where they are carried to every muscle, broken-down cell and tissue of your body. You can readily picture the result when this amazing transformation has taken place and you notice how your cheeks fill out, hollows about your neck, shoulders and bust disappear and you take on from 10 to 20 pounds of solid, healthy flesh. Sargol is absolutely harmless, inexpensive, efficient. Leading druggists of Connellsville and vicinity have it and will refund your money if you are not satisfied, as per the guarantee found in every package.

Caution—While Sargol has given excellent results in overcoming nervous dyspepsia and general stomach troubles it should not be taken by those who do not wish to gain ten pounds or more—Adv.

ONLY A MATTER OF FORM.

The County Commissioners, like Filate of old, have washed their hands of an embarrassing question. They have determined to permit nominations for third class city candidates to be filed both ways, that is to say partisan and non-partisan, with the expectation that some of the parties at interest will carry the question through the courts to final decision.

Connellsville Republicans are not much concerned in the matter. The form of the ballot or the method of voting makes little difference to them. To be exact, it only makes a difference of two months. If we vote a partisan ballot, the Connellsville Republicans will elect their city ticket in November; if a non-partisan ticket, they will elect in September under the 5% clause.

So far as Connellsville is concerned it is only a matter of form. The next City Council will be Republican.

RAILROAD RECOVERY.

The Democratic tariff law went into effect in the fall of 1913, and the following year was a bad one for business. The Democrats tell us it was the war did it, but the war didn't break out until August, while depression began in November, previously and was in full swing when 1914 opened up. The industries of the country suffered severely and with them the railroads. Railroad management that managed to keep the railroads out of the hands of receivers was a fine art. Economy and efficiency reached new developments during this trying period. The railroad situation has been bettered by the general revival of industry and the granting an advance in freight rates after a prolonged struggle. The satisfactory character of the recovery is told by the American Metal Market as follows:

In February a turn occurred in railway earnings. For months previous the total revenues had been running below those of a year previously and the net likewise, but in February a new alignment occurred. The total revenues remaining below those of a year ago but the net rose, on account of large reductions in operating expenses. This new alignment continued through March and April. The April figures having just been returned by the Bureau of "Railway Economics," which prepares a monthly statement covering all roads with $1,000,000 or more annual operating income, about 30% of all the steam railway income of the country.

Comparing each month with the corresponding month a year previous, February showed $17 per mile or 1.4% decrease in total operating revenue, but $14 or 2.4% increase in net. March showed $24 or 2.3% decrease in gross but $2 or 1.7% increase net, while April now shows $23 or 2.7% decrease in gross and $42 or 12.7% increase in net. The best operating ratios for some time were shown in March and April 1914, and 1915 respectively.

The time was that the financial showing to be made by a railroad was in many cases determined in advance, the wish on the part of some men or some small group of men being father to the financial statement that was afterwards given to an anxious public, but we think the Interstate Commerce Commission has at least succeeded in making the railway a true reflection of actual conditions. There may be occasional exceptions, but if so they are strictly exceptions. The time was, perhaps, that the discrepancies from the truth were the rule rather than the exception. The statistics as now made available may therefore be taken as really representing conditions.

There does not seem to be much room for the reflection occasionally indulged in, that savings in operating expenses shown are at the expense of the properties. That also is a matter of strict regulation by the commission, which insists that depreciation accounts, for instance, are properly representative of physical conditions. Some railroad managers insist that the depreciation accounts they are required to maintain are too large. If that is true, the railroads are being made stronger and stronger financially. If cars do not wear out as rapidly as the depreciation accounts allow for, the funds will do more than replace them when they do wear out.

The April net per mile of road is the largest ever reported by the railroads for an April. Previous to this year the best April report was that for April, 1910, and the figures available are as follows:

Month of April 1910 1915
Total per mile $944 $1,070
Expenses per mile 653 722

Net $291 $348

The above figures are not strictly comparable, because in 1910 returns from all roads were included, whereas for 1915 roads having less than $1,000,000 total annual operating revenue are excluded, thus making the average figures per mile of road somewhat higher than they otherwise would be. The difference, however, is not great, and it may be said that the April net this year was substantially as much for an April. The increase in expenses over five years ago being made up by increased density of traffic.

It is hardly likely that Holt will breed a crop of murderous cranks, but it is better to be on guard. Factories making munitions of war will be wise to exercise reasonable precautions against incrimination and other forms of destruction.

WAS IN WRONG.

Frank Holt, the demented creature who sought to stop the European war by putting an end to American shipment of munitions of war, has succeeded in committing suicide, and thus relieved the state of the duty of keeping him in restraint. Holt was dangerous and mistaken. He went to the wrong place to stop the war when he invaded the home of John Morgan and shot him up. The war was not made in this country and cannot be made here. Holt ought to have presented his arguments to Kaiser William, King George and Czar Nicholas, on the other side of the sea.

It is true that the United States is furnishing contraband to the belligerent nations, including munitions of war, yet nothing would give us greater pleasure than an opportunity to promote peace. Such industries as may be profiting by the war will be only too willing to sacrifice their war business and take a chance at the profits of peace. In fact, some American manufacturers have actually refused to engage in the preparation of war materials. Furthermore, it may be observed that thus far we have been furnishing weapons of defense rather than engines of conquest.

It is being discovered that the wholesale condemnation of monopoly is hasty and ill-considered. Every now and then a perfectly good trust is discovered, thus vindicating the position of President Roosevelt that the right remedy for monopoly and trusts is regulation and not annihilation.

Over in Washington a movement has been started in the larger towns and cities to consolidate the telephone systems. Such consolidation, it is shown, will give a better service at lower rates. Where customers pay for two telephones now they will pay for but one, and where they pay for but one, telephone with a limited service they will get for practically the same rental a much better service.

Telephone competition was necessary in the beginning of the business, before Public Service Commissions were given power to determine and regulate the reasonable character of public utility charges, but since this new and efficient remedy for the ills of monopoly has been found, the necessity for competition has ceased. In fact competition is now recognized as destructive of public economy and efficiency.

The esteemed Connellsville News is becoming slightly hysterical over the attitude of the County Commissioners in the third class city ballot matter. It says, "Does Judge Van Swearingen have any ulterior motive in closing his door to this option?" The News seems to think that the Judge should open the ballot case on his own motion and reverse President Hughes' order to give Editor Thompson a few pointers on the legal aspects of the ballot matter.

Frank Holt's pictures indicate that he persistently disregarded the injunction, "Look pleasant, please."

The Connellsville Standard hands its number of bouquets for having killed an alleged Fayette County Whiskey Trust. The proposition to merge a number of the smaller distilleries of the county is not new. Neither is a similar proposition concerning the breweries. Both seem to have fallen by their own weight. The Standard had as much to do with killing it as it did the killing of the other.

As a summer picnic resort, Ohio is just as popular as ever.

The prospects of closing the ragged gap in the Good Road Improvement between Fayette and Westmoreland counties this summer promise better than ever. The more the matter is considered by the authorities the more convinced they become of the crying necessity of action.

A Connellsville man paid $100 fine for killing a dog over a year ago and a Perry wife was granted a divorce for an act of infidelity committed 14 years ago. The more the matter is considered by the authorities the more convinced they become of the crying necessity of action.

After spending 13 months in jail for wife desertion, a Fayette county man has been released on petition of his wife. "May they be happy ever after."

It seems just as difficult to get into it as it was a century ago when Napoleon had such a hard time coming back.

The courts have declared that the Reading railroad is not a trust. The railroad system of this country is built upon corporations and combinations. Without them the best of the West would have at this time would be a jumpy service.

New industries are being built in Western Pennsylvania. It is time Connellsville woke up and made ready to group an opportunity, or better still to go out and dig one up.

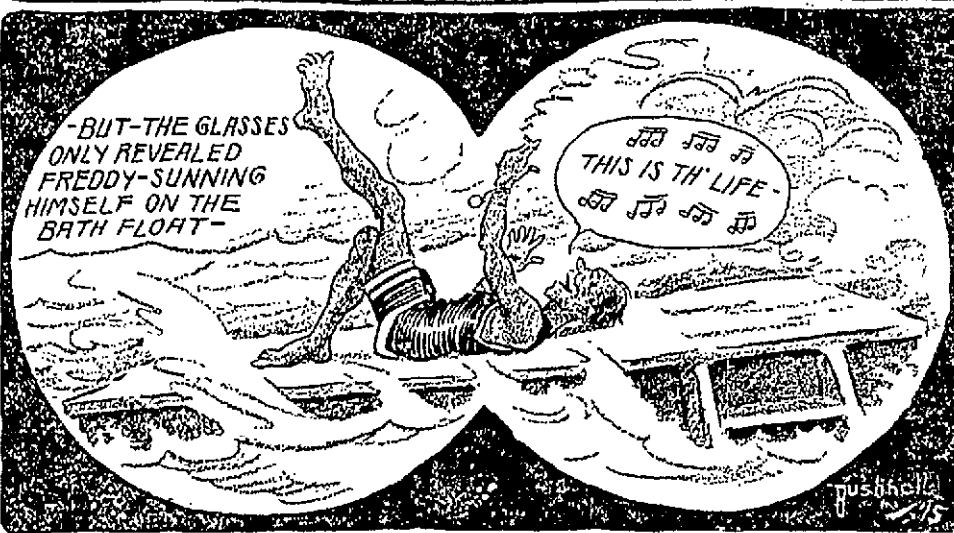

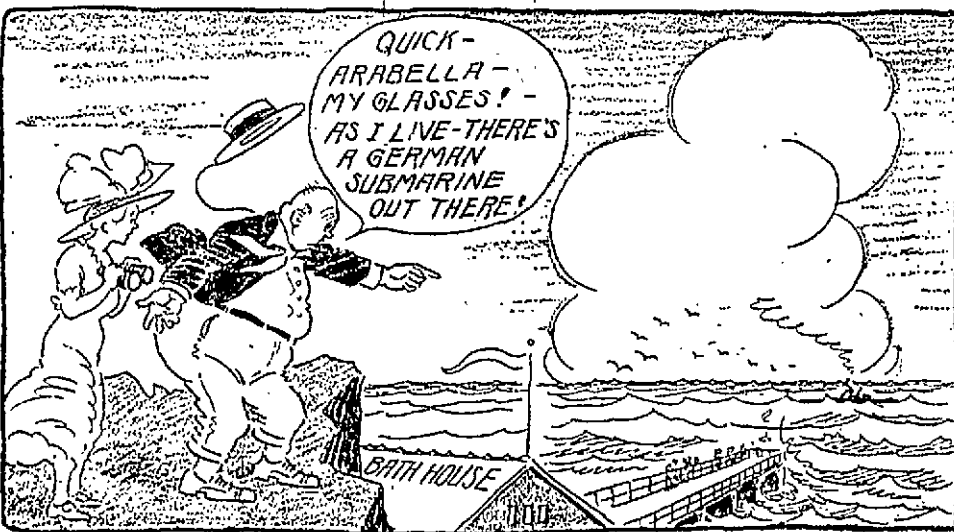

In the matter of non-partisan ballot for third class cities, President Hughes' Connellsville News says it's Van against the State. This is slightly erroneous. Counselor Hughes is still with the Judge.

The heavy undergrowth throughout the country effectively conceals the snakes, hence the unusual number of cases of snake-bite in the mountain townships. Campers and berry-pickers should watch their steps.

When the locusts came a few years ago they had "W" on their wings, but a hopeful individual out in Ohio reports finding the letter "P" on the wings of one locust caught recently. To be sure this is not a majority for peace, but it's encouraging.

In the good old days when most fishermen waited only had to go as far as the creek stream to find good sport. Now that the fishing has become far removed and rare, it is brought back within reach of everyone by the speedy automobile. When we have progressed another cycle and have restored the purity of our streams and restocked them with fish, Connellsville people will not have to go any further than the Young river to drop a line.

Telling Stories

By GEORGE FITCH,
Author of "At Good Old Swart."

Telling stories is a talent which has never yet been fostered or improved by a college or conservatory course. And yet telling stories is a more valuable accomplishment than the ability to quote Latin or to make a piano flourish for money under a bank name. A man who is so full of Latin that it drips from him in ordinary conversation may be steeped in the rule book, but he is not a storyteller. The man who says, "That reminds me of a story," is always accorded the most polite attention.

Armed with a sample case, a winning smile and one story which are not only enough to win a room, an American traveler from Maine to California, selling goods with both hands and making friends who will leave a customer's name over the goods himself while the rest of the world is being deceived.

One does not need to be an inventor to be a good storyteller. Good memory is sufficient. Many a man who can write articles which will hold the readers' attention until the furnace flies out and he freezes in his chair, can't tell a pleasant tale with two paragraphs and a point without getting it snarled up like a ball of yarn. On the other hand, a man who has to borrow a dictionary to tell how to spell a two-syllable word can tell stories from early morning until train-time without repeating a story, avoiding a recommended subject, and making a whole lot of who for each tale. Nobody writes stories anyway. They grow. It is believed that Cain told a couple on his wanderings and that all the rest descended from those. This is why some travelers from foreign lands come home with a bag of photographs and souvenirs while others come home with a stock of stories never unearthed before in the home town and get invited out to dinner 178 nights in succession.

More marvels have been heard of by a good story than by the Hague Tribunal and many a political candidate who knows enough statesmanship to keep talking for four hours at a stretch has been interred in oblivion by an opponent who talked up after dark long enough to tell a story and ask for the loan of a few votes.

Perhaps this is the reason why we are two-sided in the state of profound dissatisfaction with the men whom we elect.

Church Trouble Settled.
The troubles of the Highland Baptist Church in Connellsville have been settled by a permanent inunction granted by the court restraining Ben C. J. Wells from filing or attempting to fill the pulpit. This trouble has been on since 1913, when Rev. Wells was named as pastor, but he insisted upon remaining.

The July Sales

July is one of the sales months in the calendar of live merchants.

It is the time the stores get ready for inventory and prepare to clear out broken lots.

It is the merchant's time for planning Fall business.

And so special values are frequently offered to the public.

This fact makes newspaper advertising in July so full of interest.

One may pick up the paper any time and find that it is offering just the things they need at prices much less than they expected to pay.

Back Hurt—Nervous—Sleepless.
Cherry Tree, Pa.—"Eight years ago when my little girl was born I became near dying. When I got able to go about, my back hurt so when I would bend over that I would have to take hold of something with my hands to get up. My husband got me two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which I took and got along nicely. I could sit up, and my back did not hurt me. Was so nervous I could not sleep nights; my heart troubled me and my back had sharp, stabbing pains when I would lean my head forward. I wrote to Dr. Pierce and was advised to take 'Favorite Prescription.' I used several bottles and now I do all my own work and tend to my garden and flowers. May God bless you for my prayer."—Miss ELLIS W. STIFFLER, Route 2, Box 35.

OTHER FEATURES AS WELL

"Romance of Elaine," "The Broken Coin" and "The Diamond in the Sky." All to be seen here, with Metro, World and Universal features.

Keeping abreast of the times and realizing that serial motion pictures have "caught on" with the public, Manager Fred Robbins of the Soisson Theatre has booked three of the newest and best to begin during July. A continuation of the "Exploits of Elaine," the most popular serial shown at the Soisson, will be "The Romance of Elaine" in 12 episodes. This will begin on July 20, and an installment will be shown every 15 episodes, with the last episode shown on July 20. This is said to be the best serial ever produced by the Universal company.

"A Diamond from the Sky," which cost $500,000 to produce and for which Roy McCardell was paid $10,000 as a prize for the best idea for a serial, will begin on July 15 and continue on Thursdays for 15 weeks. This will give Soisson patrons a serial installment to look for on Mondays, Thursdays and Fridays.
It is interesting to note in connection with the "Diamond in the Sky" serial pictures that Little Pickford, sister of the famous Mary, will be starred, supported by Irving Cummings, William Russell, Charlotte Burton, George Pepelard, Eugene Ford and others.
In addition, Mr. Robbins has his regular Universal service, together with feature pictures from the World
Film Corporation, the Metro Film Company and many other famous producers.
It is the policy of the Soisson to give its patrons the best pictures pro-cessible and the program outlined above indicates that expense is not being spared to carry out this plan.

THE BARKOOT CARNIVAL

Continues to Draw Large Crowds to Fayette Field.
Large crowds continue to be drawn to the K. O. Barkoot Show, showing this week at Fayette Field.
The show attracts more than 4,000 of Connellsville's better class of citizens Tuesday night. The number of splendid attractions to be seen on the midway was a matter of comment.

The athletic show drew a large patronage, largely through the appearance of a local exponent of the wrestling art, Archie Barker, who has established an enviable record throughout the state as one of the best middleweight wrestlers of the east. He met and defeated Cyclone Mitchell, also of the middleweight class, who offers a dollar for each minute within ten that any local wrestler remains on his feet.

the mat with him without a fall.
One of the most interesting and instructive attractions on the midway is the Automobile City, which was designed and built by a Dane named Falkenberg, who worked seven years on the construction of the busy little village. The exhibit consists of more than 150 automobiles, representing people in the various occupations of life to be witnessed in any modern town, including the movement of railroad and steamship lines.

Angelo Mummolo's Royal Italian Band with the Barkoot Show has created a very favorable impression with the people of Connellsville, as they play the kind of music that is popular with all classes, in a manner that is quite above the average of any ordinary band within twice the number of pieces. Each member was originally connected with the famous Naples City Band of Naples, Italy, before coming to this country.

The Globe

The first chapter of "The Goddess," a Vitaphone serial, featuring Anita Stewart as Celestia, "The Goddess," and Earl Williams as Tom Barclay, is being shown today at the Globe Theatre, and until the story is completed a chapter will be shown each Wednesday. Other members of the cast are Paul Scardon, Frank Currier, Charles Wellesley and Thomas Brown, well known Vitaphone players. The story was written by Governor
Morris and is intensely interesting.
In the opening chapter Celestia, is shown when a child and placed in a child chiff where she is to be kept for fifteen years in order to assist a professor to preach and spread the gospel of peace and good which he has promulgated and which is designed to prevent the destruction of the United States. Believing that this gospel must come through a woman as a heaven sent messenger, Celestia is stolen to be brought up in the house of the professor who created. The serial has created considerable interest among moving picture goers and will no doubt have a number of followers and admirers of Miss Stewart.

Headache and Nervousness Cured.
"Chamberlain's Tablets are entitled to all the praise I can give them," writes Mrs. Richard C. Spencer, port, N. Y. "They have cured me of headache and nervousness and restored me to my normal health."

and twenty thousand dollars. It is an excellent play and one that will please everybody. William Clifford and Edna Muloon appear today in the thrilling two reel drama, "One circumstances call for it. The Negro comedy, "The Downfall of Dute," is a caution of a clown and will keep everybody laughing. "The Animated Weekly" has a number of interesting scenes. Tomorrow the famous "Who

"The devil you do!" Then, with the dry, door-hinge chuckle: "What's in the wind now?"

"I do want you to put him under obligations to you—the heavier the better. His mother and sister have gone out of their way to snub me, and I want to play even."

Griswold wagged his huge head, and this time the chuckle broke to a guffaw.

"He ain't the man to go to his women-folks when he gets into hot water. He'll keep it to himself; and they'll go on bluffing you, same as ever."

Miss Grierson pulled on her gauntlets and made ready to go, leisurely, as befitted her pose.

"That is where you are mistaken," she objected, coolly. "It isn't very often I can give you a business tip, but this is one of the times when I can. When John Raymer died, he left an undivided half of his estate to his wife, the other half to be shared equally by the children. At the present moment every dollar the entire family has is invested in the iron plant. You will let Mr. Raymer get himself into hot water, as you call it, and then, when I say the word, you'll reach in and pull him out."

When she was gone, the president selected another of the overgrown cigars from a box in the desk drawer, lighted it, and tilted back in the big armchair to envelop himself in a cloud of smoke. It was his single expensive habit—the rest of his tastes were of the frugal, thrifty kind. He had a great deal of money, and the indulgence helped him to push the Yellow-Dog period into a remote past.

After a time the smoke cloud became articulate, rumbling forth chuckles and Elizabethan outbursts, mingling with musings idiomatic and profane. "By gad, I believe she thought she was fooling me! Do, for a fact! But it's too thin. Of course, she wants to make the woman know, but that ain't all there is to it—not by a jugful. But it's all right; who plays her own 'and, and she's built good and able to play it. If she's after Raymer's scalp, he might as well get ready to wear a wig, right now. I'll back her to win, every time."

Accordingly, when Mr. Edward Raymer came out of the president's room at the Farmers' and Merchants' bank the following morning, he was wearing upon his face a picture of a great and successful industry to be built upon the substantial extension of credit promised by the capitalist whose presence chamber he had just quitted.

CHAPTER XII.

Loss and Gain.

Striving feebly as one who gathers up the shards and fragments after an explosion, Griswold remembered clearly the supper of testicles courses at the Hotel Chouteau. Afterward there were vague impressions, momentary branches in the wall of incense darkness. In one of these intervals a woman had stood beside him, and he seemed to remember that she had put her cool hand on his forehead. When a question was still so sharply defined that he was not surprised to find her standing at his bedside.

Before he could frame any of the queries which came thronging to the door of the returned consciousness, she smiled and shook her head and forbade him.

Later in the day the doctor came; and when the professional requirements were satisfied, Griswold learned the bare facts of his succoring. It was characteristic of the Griswold of other days that the immense obligation under which the Griswold had placed him made him gasp and perspire afresh.

Griswold looked long and earnestly at the face of his professional adviser. It was a good face, clearly lined, benevolent, and, above all, trustworthy. "Tell me one thing more, doctor, if you can. What was the motive? Was it just heavenly good-heartedness—or—"

The doctor's smile was the least possible shade wintry. "When you have lived a few years longer in this world of ours, you will not probe too deeply into motives; you will take the deed as the sufficient exponent of the prompting behind it. If I say so much, you will understand that I am not impugning Miss Grierson's motives. There are times when she is the good angel of everybody in sight, Mr.—"

The pause after the courteous title was significant, and Griswold filled it promptly. "Griswold—Kenneth Griswold. Do you mean to say that you haven't known my name, doctor?"

"We have not. We took the Good Samaritan's privilege and ransacked your belongings—Miss Margery and I—thinking there might be relatives or friends who should be notified."

"And you found nothing?" queried the sick man, a cold fear gripping at his heart.

"Nothing but clothing and your toilet tools, a pistol, and a typewritten book manuscript bearing no signature."

Griswold turned his face away and shut his eyes. Once more his stake in the game of life was gone. "There was another package of—of papers in one of the grips," he said, faintly; "quite a large package wrapped in brown paper."

"We found nothing but the manuscript. Could anyone else make use of the papers you speak of?"

Griswold was too feeble to protest, and succeeded only.

"There was money in the package," he said, leaving the physician to infer what he pleased.

"Ah; then you were robbed. It's a pity we didn't know it at the time. It is pretty late to begin looking for the thief now, I'm afraid."

"It is Pretty Late to Begin Looking for the Thief Now."

"Quite too late," said Griswold monotonously.

It was not until after the doctor had gone that Griswold was able to face the new misfortune with anything like a sober measure of equanimity. With or without money, he must relieve the Griersons of their self-assumed burden at the earliest possible moment.

This was the thought with which he sank into the first natural sleep of convalescence. But during the days which followed, Margery was able to modify it without dulling the keen edge of his obligation. What perfect hospitality could do was done, without ostentation, with the exact degree of spontaneity which made it appear as a service rendered to a kinsman. It was one of the gifts of the daughter of men to be able to ignore all the middle distances between an introduction and a friendship; and by the time Griswold was strong enough to let the big, gentle Swede plant him in a Morris chair in the sun-warmed bay window, the friendship was a fact accomplished.

"Do you know, you're the most wonderful person I have ever known," he said to Margery, on the first of the sunning days when she had come to perch in the window seat opposite his chair. "Do you believe in destiny?"

She nodded brightly. "Sometimes I do; when it brings things out the way I want them to come out."

"I've often wondered," he went on musingly. "Think of it—somewhere back in the past you took the first step in the path which was to lead you to that into napper in the Chouteau. Somewhere in my past I took the first step in the crooked trail that was to lead me there."

"Well," she encouraged. "The paths crossed—and I am your poor debtor," he finished. "I can never hope to repay you and your father for what you have done."

"Oh, yes you can," she asserted lightly. "You can pass it along to the man farther down. Forget it, and tell me what you want to know about Wabaska."

"First, I'd like to know my doctor's name."

"The idea!" she exclaimed. "Hain't there been anybody to introduce you? He is Wabaska's best-beloved 'Doctor Bortie'; otherwise Doctor Herbert C. Farnham."

"Doctor Farnham?—not Miss Char?" He hit the name in two in the middle, but the mischief was done.

"Yes; Charlotte's father," was the calm reply. "Then? Where did you meet Miss Farnham?"

"I haven't met her," he protested instantly. "She—who doesn't know me from Adam. But I have seen her, and I happened to learn her name and her home address."

"Oh," said the small fitter of deduction pegs; and afterward she talked, and made the convalescent talk, pointedly of other things.

This occurred in the forenoon of a pleasant day in May. In the afternoon of the same day Miss Grierson's trap was halted before the door of the temporary quarters of the Wabaska public library. Raymer saw the trap and crossed the street, remembering—that he would otherwise have forgotten—that his sister had asked him to get a book on orchids.

Miss Margery was in the reference room, wading absently through the newspaper files. She nodded brightly when Raymer entered—and was not in the least disturbed by the library card in his hand.

"You are just in time to help me," she told him. "Do you remember the story of that daring bank robbery in New Orleans a few weeks ago?—the one in which a man made the president draw a check and got it cashed for him?"

Raymer did remember it, chiefly because he had talked about it at the time with Jasper Grierson, and had wondered curiously how the president of the Farmers' and Merchants' would comport himself under like conditions. "If you should meet the man face to face, would you recognize him from the description?" she flashed up at Raymer.

"Not in a thousand years," he confessed. "Would you?"

"No; not from the description," she admitted. "Then she passed to a matter apparently quite irrelevant."

"Didn't I see Miss Farnham's return notice in the Wabaskan the other day?"

With Charlotte's father a daily visitor at Moroside, it seemed incredible that Miss Grierson had not heard of the daughter's homecoming. But Raymer answered in good faith.

"They came up as far as St. Louis on one of the Anchor Line—the Belle Juher—and even Miss Gilman admits that the accommodations were excellent."

She nodded absently and began to turn the leaves of the newspaper file. Raymer took it as his dismissal and went to the desk to get the orchid book. When he looked in again on his way to the street, Miss Grierson had gone, leaving the file of the Pioneer Press open on the reading desk. At first involuntarily he glanced at the first-page headlines, thrilling to a little shock of surprise when one of them proved to be the caption of another Associated Press dispatch giving a 25-line story of the capture and second escape of the Bayou State Security robber on his leave at St. Louis.

The reading of the bit of cable news impressed him curiously. Why had Miss Margery interested herself in the details of the New Orleans bank robbery? Why—with no apparent special reason—should she have remembered it at all—or, remembering it, have known where to look for the two newspaper references?

Raymer left the library speculating vaguely on the unaccountable tangents at which the feminine mind could now and then fly from the well-defined circle of the conventional. On rare occasions his mother or Gertrude did it, and he had long since learned the folly of trying to reduce the small problem to terms of known quantities masculine.

"Just this same," he said to himself, as he crossed the street to the Manufacturers' club. "Miss Grierson isn't at all the person to do things without an object."

CHAPTER XIII.

The Convalescent.

After a few more days in the Morris chair—days during which he was idly contented when Margery was with him, and vaguely dissatisfied when she was not—Griswold was permitted to go below stairs, where he met, for the first time since the Grierson roof had given him shelter, the master of Moroside.

The little visit to Jasper Grierson's library was not prolonged beyond the invalid's strength; but notwithstanding its brevity there were heart currents of antagonism evolved which Margery, present and endeavoring to serve as a lightning arrester, could neither prevent nor turn aside.

Griswold took away from the rather constrained ice-breaking in the banker's library a renewed resolve to cut his obligation to Jasper Grierson as short as possible. How he should begin again the inconstant struggle for existence was still an unsolved problem. Of the one thousand-dollar spending fund that remained something less than half; for a few weeks or months he could live and pay his way; but after that. . . . Curiously enough the alternative of another attack upon the plutocratic dragon did not suggest itself. That, he told himself, was an experiment tried and found wanting. But in any event, he must not outstay his welcome at Moroside; and with this thought in mind he crept downstairs daily after the library episode, and would give Margery no peace because she would not let him go abroad in the town.

"How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is to have a thankless—what shall I say—patient, or guest, or friend?" she laughed, garbling the quotation to fit the occasion.

"Shakespeare said 'child,' he suggested mildly.

"And so shall I," she glided—but the glaze itself was almost a carcase. "Sometimes you remind me of an impatient boy who has been promised a peach and can't wait until it ripens. But if you must have a reason why I won't drive you this afternoon, you may, we are going to have a tiny little dinner at Moroside this evening, and I want you to be fresh and rested for it."

"Certainly, I shall come, if you wish it," he assented, remembering afresh his immense obligation; and when the time was ripe he made himself presentable and felt his way down the dimly lighted library stair, being minded to slip into the social pool by the route which promised the smallest splash and the fewest ripples. It was a stirring of the Philistine in him that led him to prefigure weariness and banality in the prospect. Without in the least expecting it, Griswold was a Brahmin of the severest sect on his social side; easily displeased to hold aloof and to criticize, and, as a man eastern-bred, severely assured that nothing truly acceptable in the social sense could come out of the Nazareth of the West.

For this cause he was properly humiliated when he entered the spacious double drawing-rooms and found them so comfortably crowded by a throng of conventionally clothed and conventionally behaved guests that he was immediately able to lose himself—and any lingering trace of self-consciousness—in a company which, if appearances were to be trusted, were even only by reason of Wabaska's location on the map.

And the charming young hostess—hitherto he had known her only as his benefactress and the thoughtful caretaker for his comfort. But now, at this first sight of her in the broader social field, she shone upon and dazzled him. Admitting that the later charm might be subtly suggested—she refused to analyze it too closely—it was undeniable that it warmed him to a never and a stronger life; that he could bank in its generous glow like some hibernating thing of the wild answering to the first thrilling of the springtide. True, Miss Grierson bore little resemblance to any ideal of his past imaginings; she might even be the Aspinia to Charlotte's Pamela; but, for all that, but, even so, was not the daughter of Aeschylus well beloved of men and of heroes?

It was some little time afterward and Jasper Grierson, strolling like a grim and rather unworldly master of ceremonies among his guests, had casually introduced three or four of the men, when Griswold gladly made room in the window seat for his transformed and glorified mistress of the luncheon. As had happened more than once before, her nearness intoxicated him; and while he made sure now that the charm was at least partly physical, its appeal was none the less irresistible.

"You Have Many Missions, Miss Margery."

"Are you dreadfully tired?" she asked, adding quickly: "You mustn't let me make a martyr of you. It's your privilege to disappear whenever you feel like it."

"Indeed, I'm not at all tired," he protested. "It is all very comforting and homelike; so vastly—so homelike!—that I feel like the word which would come to my mind without trying him open to the charge of patronizing superciliousness, and she supplied it promptly.

"So different from what you were expecting; I know. You have been thinking of us as barbarians—outer barbarians, perhaps—and you find that we are only harmless provincials. But really, you know, we are improving. I wish you could have known Wabaska as it used to be."

"It is all very grateful and delightful to me," he confessed, at length. "I have been out of the social rutting for a long time, but I may as well admit that I am shamelessly epicurean by nature, and an ascetic only when the necessities drive."

"I know," she asserted, with quick appreciation. "An ascetic has to be both, hasn't he?—keen to enjoy, and well hardened to endure."

He turned upon her squarely. "Where did you ever learn how to say such things as that?" he demanded.

It was an opening for mockery and good-natured ruffery, but she did not make use of it. Instead, she let him look as deeply as he pleased into the velvet eyes when she said: "It is given to some of us to see and to understand where others have to learn slowly, letter by letter. Surely, your own gift has told you that, Mr. Griswold?"

"It has," he acknowledged. "But I have found few who really do understand."

"Which is to say that you haven't yet found your other self, isn't it? Perhaps that will come, too, if you'll only be patient—and not expect too many other gifts of the gods along with the one priceless gift of perfect sympathy."

"When I find the one priceless gift, I shall confidently expect to find everything else," he asserted, still held a willing prisoner by the bewitching eyes.

She laughed softly. "You'll be disappointed. The gift you demand will preclude some of the others; as the others would certainly preclude it."

How can you be so an author and not understand that?"

"I am not an author, I am sorry to say," he objected. "I have written but the one book, and I have never been able to find a publisher for it."

"But you are not going to give up?"

"No; I am going to rewrite the book and try again—and yet again, if needful. It is my message to mankind, and I mean to deliver it."

"Bravo!" she applauded, clapping her hands in a little burst of enthusiasm which, if it were not real, was at least an excellent simulation. "In only the weak ones who say, 'I hope. For this true strong heart there is only one battle cry, 'I will!'"

When you get blue and discouraged you must come to me and let me cheer you. Cheering people is my mission, if I have any."

Griswold's pale face flushed and the blood sang loudly in his veins. He wondered if she had been tempted to read the manuscript of the book while he was fighting his way back to consciousness and life. If they had been along together, he would have asked her. The bare possibility set all the springs of the author's vainly publishing within him. There and then he promised himself that she should hear the rewriting of the book, chapter by chapter. But what he said was out of a deeper and worthier undertone.

"You have many missions, Miss Margery; some of them you choose, and some are chosen for you."

"No," she denied; "nobody has ever chosen for me."

"That may be true, without making me a false prophet. Sometimes when we think we are choosing for ourselves, chance chooses for us; often times not, I believe."

She turned on him quickly, and for a single swiftly passing instant the velvet eyes were deep wells of soberness with an indefinable underdepth of sorrow in them. Griswold had a sudden conviction that for the first time in his knowing of her he was looking into the soul of the real Margery Grierson.

"What you call 'chance' may possibly have a bigger and better name," she said gravely.

Some little time after this Raymer, who had been one of the men introduced by Jasper Grierson, turned up again in the invalid's corner. Raymer suggested the smoking-room and a cigar, and Griswold went willingly.

From that on the path to better acquaintance was the easiest of short cuts, even as the mild cigar which Raymer found in his pocket case paved the way for a return of the smoker's zest in the convalescent. Without calling himself a reformer, the young ironmaster proved to be a practical sociologist. Wherefore, when Griswold presently mounted his own sociological hobby, he was promptly invited to visit the Raymer foundry and machine works, to the end that he might have some of his theories of the universal oppression of wage earners charitably modified.

"Of course, I don't deny that we're a long way from the millennium yet," was Raymer's summing up of the conditions in his own plant. "But I do deny that we are on a present-day, living footing. So far as the men understand loyalty, they are loyal; partly to my father's memory; partly, I hope, to me. We have never had a strike or an approach to one, or a disagreement that could not be adjusted amicably. Whether these conditions can be maintained after we double our capacity and get in a lot more blood, I can't say. But I hope they can."

"You are enlarging?" said Griswold. Raymer was enlarging until the only other man in the smoking den had gone back to the drawing-rooms before he said: "You're right; I caught the fever along with the rest of them a few weeks ago, and I'm already beginning to wish that I hadn't."

"You are afraid of the market?"

"No; times are good, and the market—our market, at least—is daily growing stronger. It is rather a matter of finances. I am an engineer, as my father was before me. When it comes to wrestling with the money devil, I'm outclassed from the start."

"There are a good many more of us in the same boat," said Griswold, leaving an opening for further confidences if Raymer chose to make them. But the young ironmaster was looking at his watch, and the confidences were postponed.

"I'm keeping you up, when I dare say you ought to be in bed," he protested; but Griswold held him long enough to ask for a suggestion in a small matter of his own.

Now that he was able to be about, he was most anxious to relieve Miss Grierson and her father of the change and care of one whose obligation to them was already more than mountain-high; did Raymer happen to know of some quiet household where the obligated one could find lodging and a simple table?

Raymer, taking time to think of it, did know. Mrs. Hotcomb, the widow of his father's bookkeeper, owned her own house in Shawnee street. It was not a boarding house. The widow rented rooms to two of Mr. Grierson's bank clerks, and she was looking for another desirable lodger. Quite possibly she would be willing to board the extra lodger. Raymer himself would go and see her about it.

"It is an exceedingly kind-hearted community, this home town of yours, Mr. Raymer," was the convalescent's rave-taking, when he shook hands with the ironmaster at the foot of the stairs; and that was the thought which he took to bed with him after Raymer had gone to make his adieu to the small person who, in Griswold's reckoning, owned the kindest of kind hearts.
